Supreme Court Declines to "Water Down" Curative Proviso

A 6-3 majority of the Supreme Court refused to relax the requirement for applying s.686\(1\)\(b\)\(iii\) of the Criminal Code (the curative proviso) in R. v. Sarrazin, 2011 SCC 54, a case where the trial judge failed to charge the jury on the viable alternative charge of attempted murder. The majority upheld the Court of Appeal order for a retrial of the second degree murder conviction, finding that the burden on the Crown to demonstrate an "overwhelming" case or a "harmless" error of law should not be relaxed. The implications of the decision are discussed in Erring on the Side of Caution: R. v. Sarrazin, posted November 17, 2011 on The Court.

Intoxication and Insanity are Distinct Legal Concepts: SCC

The Supreme Court examines the scope of both the insanity defence and the defence of self-induced intoxication in R. v. Bouchard-Lebrun, 2011 SCC 58, a unanimous decision upholding the Quebec Court of Appeal finding that a toxic psychosis resulting from the voluntary consumption of drugs is not a "mental disorder" within the meaning of s.16 of the Criminal Code. The court dismissed the accused's appeal of his conviction on aggravated assault and assault charges.

New Trial Ordered in Controversial Sexual Assault Case: MBCA

The trial judge erred in conducting his credibility findings on the basis of a credibility contest between the complainant and the accused according to the Court of Appeal in R. v. Rhodes, 2011 MBCA 98, making it unclear whether he had respected the substance of the W.(D.) analysis. That error was compounded by the judge's "piecemeal" approach to analyzing the evidence, in which the evidence was assessed on an "event-by-event" basis rather than cumulatively. The cumulative effect of these inadequacies was that the judge "improperly shifted the burden of proof from the Crown to the accused and therefore misapplied the burden of proof beyond a reasonable doubt." The court allowed the accused's conviction appeal and ordered a new trial. A previous ruling had denied the Women's Legal Education and Action Fund Inc. application for leave to intervene in the case.

Simplifying Breach Hearings: MBCA

In R. v. Laporte \(R.D.\), 2011 MBCA 96, the Court of Appeal overturned the motion judge's finding that the Crown could not present viva voce evidence at a breach of conditional sentence hearing. The court found that s.742.6\(4\) of the Criminal Code does not create a mandatory requirement that the Crown provide documentary evidence for the prosecution of a breach, it simply provides an evidentiary shortcut (para.34). While it is up to the Crown to choose whether to rely on this enabling provision, the court cautioned that "(i)t should not use its discretion to defeat the intention of Parliament that the majority of breach hearings be proven by way of documentary evidence" (para. 36).

Judge Entitled to Reject Joint Sentencing Recommendation: MBCA

The trial judge did not err when he declined to accept the recommendation of Crown and defence counsel and imposed a harsher sentence for aggravated assault against an infant according to the court in R. v. Wolociej, 2011 MBCA 91. The court reduced the 2 year sentence by 6 months, however, because the judge's reasons showed he misinterpreted the analysis of child abuse cases set out in R. v. MacDonald \(K.\), 2009 MBCA 36 and emphasized the accused's moral blameworthiness, resulting in an unduly harsh sentence.

In Force Legislation

Bill C-22, An Act respecting the mandatory reporting of Internet child pornography by persons who provide an Internet service, came into force December 8, 2011, requiring internet service providers to notify police when they believe their service is being used to commit a child pornography offence. Details about the new legislation can be found in the legislative summary, in the press releases and background documents, in the parliamentary speeches, and in the Slaw article Mandatory Reporting of Internet Child Pornography by Persons Who Provide an Internet Service Now Law.
